The Future Journalist: Thoughts from Two Generations

written by Manoj Khanna | February 8, 2010
http://static.livestream.com/chromelessPlayer/wrappers/TwitcamPlayer.swf?hash=e66g via mashable.com
This is an interesting article, and a great insight into what we should anticipate from the journalist of tomorrow. With the power of social media and the becoming of the flat world, there's no argument about how well the connections and conduits have to be rooted into the social aspect to understand and provide a meaningful commentary, opinions, and perspectives in the world of tomorrow.

The journalism days of yore and the digital age both have a lot of learning, but the latter needs to learn more from the former in order to learn the pure tricks of the trade. Also the former admonishes the latter against some scenarios that has lead to this debate of new age journalism.

But I yearned for that news paper with my morning coffee everyday; but now no more.

Note:

Here's the link to the article <a href="http://bit.ly/cbEvVm.

http://bit.ly/cbEvVm.

Here's the link to the presentation http://bit.ly/cxgyyu